About Autism

Autism Spectrum Condition is a lifelong developmental condition that affects the way a person:

- Communicates and interacts with others
- Experiences their senses
- Thinks and behaves flexibly

This means that autistic people can have difficulties with everyday life. Autism is referred to as a spectrum because each person is different, and it is important to remember that each person will have their own strengths and weaknesses. With the right understanding and support, autistic people can lead full and rewarding lives.

What we believe

We believe in the empowerment of children and young people with autism to live a full and active life.

Our work is based around child centred principles focused on building up and celebrating the individual strengths and gifts of each child.

We actively support parental and caring responsibilities encouraging parental confidence and knowledge to support their child with autism, to flourish.
